

Whatever you're calling them— frills, ruffles, flounces— there is a difference between the season's most desirable and feminine details. They're everywhere: running across shoulders, falling from sleeves, skirts and more as ultra-romantic trims and cascading tiers. We narrowed it down, quite literally, to size. Frills have the smallest, thinnest sections, while ruffles tend to be larger and wider, making the flounce the biggest and most dramatic. Delicate or graphic, depending on who's gathering the fabric; we've identified some key examples below.
